Quo Vadis '67

Quo Vadis '67, being the first complete record of the premier college year, is not so much a recording of events of this institution as a statement of fact that a dream has grown into a well established fact. The high academic achievement in the first year of operation of the college serves as proof. The years of preparation spent by interested individuals in bringing this about can be viewed as highly successful and we, the students of this college, are pleased that the facilities offered to us were of the highest degree.

Editor's Message

Welcome to the first edition of the Grande Prairie Junior College yearbook. In preparing this book we have tried to capture all phases of college life; the serious as well as the fun. The title "Quo Vadis" is very appropriate in this case. I feel that it can be translated in two ways. First as a question "Whither thou goest?" We are a first year college and as a result we must think of where we are going from here and govern ourselves accordingly. Secondly it can be translated as a statement. No matter where we go in the years to follow we shall always remember the year we spent here. As we are a small college we are actually a bridge between the sheltered years in high school and the freedom of a large university. Being charter students we had a unique experience; we made close friends with instructors as well as fellow students. It was the desire of the yearbook staff in presenting this book to help you remember this year as something special and to cherish it as one of your most memorable experiences.

Dean's Message

This has been a year of "firsts" for the College. Everything we have done will serve as a precedent for future decisions and actions in this institution. This body of precedents forms the basis of the traditions which every College seeks to establish in its academic program and its related activities.

These practices have been established by all of us who were brought together by the establishment of the College. Future growth and development will be fostered if we can maintain the spirit of co-operation and goodwill that has marked every phase of the program which was begun this year.

In this, the first yearbook, your committee has attempted to set down some impressions and reflections on the first year of the College and, for most of you, the first year of study beyond the high school. This book will be a reminder of events, activities, and particularly of the personal associations you have had during this period.

Since you are the first class of the College, you are "charter members" of the alumni of this institution. I trust that you will be able to look back on your year in the College--a College which you helped to establish--as one that has been enjoyable and meaningful.

President's Message

I believe that we, the first students of Grande Prairie Junior College, have shown that a Junior College in the Peace River country can be successful -- and we've had a good time making it so.

We've quaffed gallons of coffee, read volumes of books, scratched pages of notes, laughed and loved, failed and triumphed, partied with abandon, and studied with fervour. We explored subjects ranging from Krebs's Citric Acid Cycle and the structural formula for lysergic acid diethylamide to the ramifications of the French Revolution and the mysteries of Freud.

Most important we have laid a basis for a structure which can only grow. At the beginning of the session our future was uncertain. Perhaps we accepted a risk in coming here. Our first year has not been without inconveniences.

However, we have completed the first year with a good record.

With the momentum of a successful first year and with continued optimism, determination, and confidence, Grande Prairie Junior College students can look to even better years ahead.
